When swarms occur, the honey bees can remain at the "muster" point from which they send out hundreds of scout bees to look for a permanent cavity (nesting place) in which to relocate the swarm to. They can remain at the "muster" point for 2 minutes, 2 hours or 2 days or any length of time in between. On some occasions, the scouts cannot find a suitable new home so they remain there and start building comb. So it is important you contact someone as soon as possible to remove the swarm.

Unless specified, there is no fee for the capture of a swarm. However, you should verify with the person you contact to retrieve the swarm.
